

Wimbledon estate agents, Brinkley's says green is good.

Brinkley's Estate Agents, which has branches in Putney, Wimbledon Hill and Wimbledon Park, goes along with the suggestions of the NAEA.

According to a recent report from the National Association of Estate Agents, home- and property owners should 'go green' in order to make their properties more energy efficient and save money.

Cavity-wall insulation, draught-stripping and loft insulation are the main energy-saving measures but fitting a new boiler can also save emissions and money.

Robert Brinkley, CEO of Brinkley's Estate Agents said, "Not only do these measures save homeowners money but when it comes to sales or lettings, it makes their property a much more attractive option."

"Furthermore, if loans become available under the Government's Green Deal initiative, it will spread the cost for Vendors and Landlords, who have to have an Energy Performance Certificate or EPC for their properties."

ENDS